Section 1: Various Types of Metal Zippers

Metal zippers, made from brass, aluminum or zinc alloys, are valued for their strength, durability, and premium look. Unlike plastic or coil zippers, they feature individually molded metal teeth for a secure grip, making them ideal for denim, workwear, and heavy-duty bags etc. However, without proper storage, oxidation may cause discoloration and fabric staining. For high-quality, corrosion-resistant metal zippers, explore HIGER at www.higer-zipper.com.

Section 2: Various Type of Coil Zippers

A coil zipper, also known as a nylon coil zipper, features teeth made from coiled monofilament, traditionally nylon, sewn onto a zipper tape. Coil zippers are lightweight, flexible, and durable. They have a continuous coil chain that ensures smooth operation. When the coil is positioned on the back of the zipper rather than the front, it is called an invisible zipper or reversed coil zipper.

* Typically, standard coil zippers have visible elements on the outside, but they can also be designed with the coil hidden on the inside for a more discreet look.

Section 3: Various Type of Plastic Zippers

* The molded plastic zipper, also called vislon zipper or delrin zipper is made of injected plastic elements, typically polyacetal resin, making it lighter than metal zippers of the same size. With excellent corrosion resistance, durability, lightweight properties, and environmental friendliness, the fade-resistant straight tape with low shrinkage is ideal for workwear, down jackets, and tactical bags.
